Arapahoe County Communication Services wins 6 awards

IABC recognizes department for marketing and communication projects

LITTLETON, CO --- Arapahoe County's Communication Services Department recently was recognized for communication excellence with six awards from the International Association of Business Communicators Colorado chapter.

The International Association of Business Communicators is a worldwide network of communication professionals committed to the highest organizational communication standards. The professional organization was founded in 1970 and has more than 100 chapters and 13,000 members in 60 counties, including a chapter serving the Denver metro area. The Bronze Quill is IABC's highest local honor and recognizes excellence in communication management, marketing, public relations, graphic design and media relation skills.

Liz Ellis, Creative Services Specialist II, won the chapter's Bronze Quill Award in the design and photography category for the One Call, That's All - a postcard mailer and magnet promoting the Public Works and Development department's new one-stop customer service phone number.

Katrina Seymour, Communication Services Specialist II and Ellis won two Award of Merit honors for their work on the Fast Facts Benefits brochure and Embrace a Life collateral redesign - projects that promoted services provided by the County's Human Services Department.

Mindy Edstrom, Communication Services Specialist I, earned an Award of Merit for the County's Take Your Child to Work Day event. Andrea Rasizer, Communication Services Director, along with Edstrom, Seymour, Ellis, Sharan Christ and TM Design received an Award of Merit for the County's 2005 Getting to Know Arapahoe: Your County at Work Annual Report.

Finally, Communication Services and Bond Video Arts received an Award of Merit for the County's First in Colorado, First in Service video.
